WHEELING, JUNE 20, 1892.

FIRST DISTRICT
Congressional Convention.

A convention of the First Congressional District Republicans will be held in the city of Wheeling, W. Va., on Thursday, July 14, 1892, to nominate a candidate for Congress for said district to be voted for at the election to be held in November next, and to transact such other business as may come before the convention.

Chairman Congressional Committee.
JOSEPH C. SHADY, Secretary.

NATIONAL REPUBLICAN TICKET.

FOR PRESIDENT,
BENJAMIN HARRISON,
of Indiana.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT, WHITELAW REID,
of New York.

"One Good Term Deserves Another."

OHIO COUNTY REPUBLICAN TICKET.

FOR SHERIFF,
T. C. MOFFAT.

FOR PROSECUTING ATTORNEY,
SAMUEL O. BOYCE.

FOR JUDGE OF THE DISTRICT,
W. H. HORNISSE.

FOR JUDGE OF THE DISTRICT,
ROBERT ANDERSON.

FOR COUNTY SURVEYOR,
JAMES GILCHRIST.

FOR MEMBERS HOUSE OF DELEGATES,

A Man Who Knows.

A philosopher turns up at the Democratic seat of war in the person of "Al" Fletcher, long a ward manager for Mr. Randall, under Cleveland an office holder in Washington, and now with Whitney and Lamont something in the electric railway line. Fletcher is a shrewd politician and understands the business better than some of the men who are higher in his party's councils. Mr. Fletcher has been taking, and this is part of his talk:

There is too much ambition, and there are too many state favorites. In reality, we ought to look out for New York and Indiana, and let the whole north beside go. I tell you, gentlemen, that if the Democratic party is beaten this time I believe it will go down for good. The strain to work and raise money for eight years, and then to have to carry this man, who is a hundred speeches, and you can turn them over and over and get nothing out of them to count on. His appointment shows that he is a fine politician, and that is why his convention so easily renominated him.

The Democracy is essentially a southern party. Its vital parts are to be found in those southern states in which there is no suffrage to speak of, where practically the electoral vote is already cast for the nominee of the Chicago convention.

All the talk about picking up this or that state heretofore Republican is an idle use of breath. With the South and Indiana and New York the Democratic ticket can win. Otherwise it is a gone con-skin.

It will not carry New York and Indiana this year. It is confronted by a Republican nominee who carried both four years ago and is stronger now than he was then, because he has given the country one of the strongest and best administrations in its history.

Harrison made no mistakes in the campaign of 1888 and will make none in this campaign. It is as Mr. Fletcher says about his campaign speeches—the opposition can get nothing out of them to turn to its advantage. Benjamin Harrison has proved himself a phenomenal campaigner.

Mr. FAIRCHILD, Mr. Cleveland's secretary of the treasury and leader of the anti-snap New Yorkers in Chicago, has his callers received by a "button" who wears gold and receives cards for him on a silver salver. Is that the way to win against the rugged methods of the Tammany tiger?

Mr. CLEVELAND's idea is that it will hit him on the third ballot. Better take it on the first if he wants to make sure of it.

Good Man Depew.

The President could not have tendered to a better man the important office of secretary of state. Mr. Depew is well equipped for any public station. He is learned far above the average of well informed men, is full of resource and knows how to do the right thing at the right time. There seems to be no question about the tender of the place, but much question about the acceptance.

New York has had a pretty firm grip on the state department. To Democratic administrations it has furnished Van Buren, Marcy and Wright, to Republican administrations Seward, Fish and Evarts. Depew would hold his own with any who have gone before.

When you are very warm, if you will just think to tell somebody how very warm you are it will make you very much more comfortable.

The Blow to Mr. Blaine.

The sudden calamity which has fallen on Mr. Blaine, taking from him a third child in a comparatively short time, moves with sinister pity every feeling heart and sends out to the old statesman the tenderest condolences of his countrymen.

Mr. Blaine's love for his family is one of the strong characteristics of his strong nature. No matter how much immersed in public affairs he has always found his greatest delight in his home and his family.

The son who now lies dead so young was in no sense a public figure. He was a well educated man, who took to affairs and gave close attention to business. Since the death of the eldest son Edmund was the hope of his family, and as a business man was making for himself what promised to be more than an ordinary career.

The story which credits him with being at Minneapolis as a manager is open to question. He was there, but did not seem to be taking an active part. He was not a politician.

Mr. CLEVELAND's nomination would be the first on record against such a protest from the regular party organization in the nominee's own state. To make it all the more pronounced, his own state is one which his party must carry to elect the President. Queer things happen in politics, and Mr. Cleveland is undoubtedly the choice of the Democracy of the country.

Your Uncle Benjamin is not bothering about the Chicago convention. He can lay out the best they have in the shop. He knocked over the idol only four short years ago.

Two Democratic Rules.

The two-thirds rule and the unit rule have been in force in the Democratic party for sixty years. They were fastened on the Democracy at Baltimore, in 1832.

It is often said that the aim of the two-thirds rule was to secure the very strongest man for the presidential nomination. The fact is that it was conceived by the slave-holding power to give it a potential grip on the nomination, so that the strongest man would have to come its way and make his peace before he could get the nomination. The reason has passed away, but the thing remains.

The unit rule never was anything more than a contrivance to enable the majority in a delegation to strangle a minority. The Republican party knocked that out in 1880. It is now settled for all time that in a Republican convention every delegate is entitled to cast his vote as he pleases. This is American.

The bicycle rider, male and female, is observed to be an increasing quantity. The two-wheeled machine has come to be a thing of comfort, convenience and remarkable speed, costing less than a good saddle horse in the first place and not up to the trick of eating its head off. It is a great feature in the life of our own city and will be a greater.

Pittsburgh is rejoicing in another great gas strike near by which promises the best supply of model fuel she has ever had. Visitors who have seen the returning clouds of smoke will extend cordial congratulations to the bustling, enterprising city at the head of the Ohio.

Bismarck's son is to be married in Vienna to-morrow, and a host of persons of high degree are fleeing the Austrian capital to prevent a host of embarrassments to Austria and Germany. Bismarck continues to be more than six feet high.

Mr. Depew is fifty-eight years old, and has laid up enough for a rainy day. He has no ambition to accumulate up to the Jay Gould point, and may consent to accept the portfolio of state with its comparatively small salary of $3,000 a year.

GORMAN for President! How the Baltimore ballot-box stuffers would rejoice over their vindication by their party in convention assembled. The country would vindicate itself in another way.

Mr. CLEVELAND's age has been a matter of uncertainty. He quotes himself at fifty-five in the shade. He will be at least that much older before he can boss the White House again.

It is very unkind to say that Tammany has gone to Chicago on a trading expedition. Above all things desiring to come home bringing the big pelt of one G. Cleveland.

It is suggested that if Hill had sense enough he could name the Chicago nominee. He thinks he has and he thinks the nominee's name will be Hill.

Boies fails to get the nomination he will be sorry that he didn't remain in the Republican party, in which he was a shouter eight years ago.

DEMOCRATIC opposition to a second presidential term is touching. Mr. Cleveland was renominated in 1888 while he was still in office.

The address of Secretary Elkins to the graduating class at West Point, published in full in to-day's INTELLIGENCER, is an admirable production. It not only suited the occasion, being full of thoughtful advice to the graduates, but it impresses on the country the true idea of the army, which is more to preserve the peace than to make war.

THE NEW YORK "TRIBUNE"

And its Settlement With Union Printers. President Kenney's Speech.

PHILADELPHIA, June 18.—The recent adjustment of the relations existing between the New York Tribune and Typographical Union No. 6 came up in this afternoon's session of the National Convention of Typographical Unions, which opened here on Monday. The subject was introduced by President John A. Kenney, of No. 6. Mr. Kenney, it will be remembered was chairman of the committee from No. 6 which attended the late Republican National convention in Minneapolis to advise that body of the settlement with the Tribune. He, and the other members of the committee, Messrs. Costello, Brennan, Hurley and Hancock, in addition to performing this duty, asked for the nomination of Mr. Whitelaw Reid for Vice President. On account of this latter action on the part of Mr. Kenney and the other members of the committee, some dissatisfaction was expressed in New York and other parts of the country, and an effort was made to get the national convention here to censure Mr. Kenney's committee, and also Typographical Union No. 6. It was this that led Mr. Kenney to appear before the convention to-day.

Mr. Kenney opened his speech by making an official declaration to the effect that all differences with the Tribune had been settled satisfactorily, and that all unfriendly action hitherto taken against that paper by the union had been rescinded. Then he took up the question of his course at Minneapolis. He spoke of this with some degree of feeling. For thirty-two years, he declared, he had been identified with the cause of organized labor, and for more than twenty-five years he had been one of the most active members of Typographical Union No. 6. To have his motives impugned as they had been by certain persons and papers, which had shown an unfriendly spirit toward the union in the past, was annoying in the extreme. He had done nothing at Minneapolis, or anywhere else, that he did not believe was right, and entirely in the interest of the union and that he would not do over again under similar conditions. Continuing, Mr. Kenney denied the right of the national convention to pass judgment upon his acts. He was responsible to his local organization, No. 6, and to it alone. The action of his committee had not been passed upon by No. 6, and until it had been passed upon his case had no standing whatever in the convention.

Mr. Kenney's remarks made a deep impression upon the 200 or more delegates present, and when he finished he was greeted with the loudest applause. His remarks were supplemented by a few words from Secretary Ferguson, who spoke in a similar vein, heartily endorsing the action of President Kenney and the committee. Charles J. Dumar, ex-president of the organization, who began negotiations with the Tribune two years ago, followed Mr. Ferguson in a vigorous speech, supporting the action of the committee at Minneapolis and declaring that Typographical Union No. 6, would endorse what had been done by vote of at least ten to one. John T. Burke, chairman of the New York delegation, who was prominently mentioned as a candidate for president of the International Union, took the same view of the case as Mr. Dumar, and made a strong appeal to the convention not to interfere with the matter, as it belonged entirely to No. 6.

The debate was continued by Mr. Campbell, of Tennessee, and others, and when the resolution was offered referring the whole matter to No. 6, it was carried unanimously, and President Kenney was warmly congratulated upon the result, since it was considered by his friends as a complete vindication of his course. Mr. Kenney's friends, led by John R. O'Donnell, the well-known union leader in New York, have been rallying to his support within the last few days, and have made themselves felt here in the convention. Mr. Kenney will return to New York on Sunday. He has been ill since his return from the west, and is still practically confined to his room. He was seen tonight at the Lafayette Hotel, and in response to an inquiry about the action of the convention, said: "I cannot say that I was surprised at what was done. To be perfectly frank, I expected it. I did not believe that a convention of fellow craftsmen, with whom I have been actively identified for over thirty years, would listen to the unfair partisan clamor that has been made by people whose friendship for the union has been seriously questioned in the past. I have acted, as I believe, for the best interests of No. 6; and I am well satisfied that, when the matter is understood there, what I have done will receive the approval of every fair-minded member of the organization. I thoroughly understand whence this criticism comes, and I shall not hesitate when the time comes to speak plainly on this point. A persistent effort has been made for a long time on the part of a certain element to run No. 6 in the interests of one political party, this same element all the time professing that politics must not be named in connection with the union. Their professions, however, deceived nobody.

"I do not care to dwell upon this point just now; I can only say I am quite prepared to make my report to the union, and I have not the slightest fear but that I shall be sustained by our people. There is not a printer here in New York who knows me who will not testify that I have placed my union first before my politics always, and I am perfectly willing to stand on any record now. I do not care to say anything more in reply to the absurd statements that have appeared in print in regard to this matter. While some of them have been somewhat irritating, I cannot say that they have worried me in the least. I have perfect confidence in the good sense of Typographical Union No. 6."
